“ You were one of the first people I met at University who thought like me. Being overly sensitive and empathetic always seemed like a burden, but you helped show me that we can use both our privilege and our suffering to help others who need us. We will never stop organizing in your honor and your memory will not die out with us. You were important to me, my friends, and SJP as an organization, from your corny jokes to simply you listening to our history. The greatest thing you ever did was help normalize the idea of selflessly giving back and caring about others. Whether it be your time, sanity, or even capital, whatever was yours was also ours. We miss you so much Lex, there is no worthy revolution without you in it and I hope we can fight for everything you believed in. You believed that community/humans come first and I hope we can make that a reality in your name. ❤️
